HONGKONG, MAY 4, 1867.

THE tendency to make much ado about nothing is one of the evils most prominent in all small communities, and more especially, the tendency to make much ado about very small subjects of quarrel. It must be premised, indeed, that in Hongkong more than in most places this tendency is kept down, and that comparing it with other small communities society is less broken up by petty feuds than might have been expected. There is an observable habit of caution, indeed, ingrained in most residents here, sometimes pushed too far, and leading to the extinction of healthy individuality and the encouragement of morbid sensitiveness. It is often wise to avoid taking over-serious views of life, to be frank and natural in the expression of opinions, and trustful in the effect of a reputation for candour in preventing others from suspecting that you are cherishing deep-seated and sinister suspicious in secret. An excessively diplomatic manner often defeats its own aim in private life. It gives weight to trifling things which may be said, leads people to suspect hints and innuendoes where they may not be intended, and generally encourages a heavy pomposity of manner entirely foreign to the careless ease so much more enjoyable in large cities. If the especial maxim that "nothing is new and nothing true, and it does not much matter," is carrying an easy spirit of gaiety a little too far, the contrary rule, which seems to hold good with some people, that "everything is new and everything is true, and everything is of the very utmost importance," is far worse. We are quoting an old phrase here, used some years ago in the Saturday Review, where a good deal of ridicule is always ready for modern followers of HERACLITUS, or, rather, the followers of that serious theory of life with which he is popularly identified. The Saturday Review—to imagine for a moment that it could take cognisance of our small affairs—would certainly not encourage the "utmost importance" school of philosophy, rather too much admired in Hongkong.

To take light and easy views of life is sometimes the highest achievement of worldly wisdom, and more good may often be done, even in great public affairs, by laughter than by tears. Mr. WALPOLE's tears, which have become so famous in connection with the Reform Demonstrations and the deputation of BEALES and Co., did not save the Hyde-Park railings, or the police from stones, but the interest of that patriotic firm is not increased by the amusing account given by the unimpassioned reporter of the Times, of the costermongers' turpentine lamps, with which the meeting in Trafalgar-square was "illuminated," and the "chaff" of the crowd when their stout champion was hoisted up upon a level with Sir EDWIN's lions, to give them his harmless dose of revolution and water. One consideration which justifies the laughing philosophers, by the way, is, that while you adhere to "chaff" you can't lose your temper, and not losing your temper in argument of any kind, is a prodigious gain. It is quite on the cards that the other side, as lawyers say, may lose their temper under those circumstances, but that is their affair. The invariable success of the London boy in the verbal encounters he is constantly engaged in, arises from his steady devotion to DEMOCRITUS. What chance has a serious beadle in conversation with a gamin? If the beadle could only have the courage to take a facetious view of his young friend's remarks, victory might be his; but in the eyes of the beadle the gamin's nonsense is always a matter of the greatest importance—an insult to the cocked-hat and gold-lace coat in the first instance, and, through those ecclesiastical vestments, to the Established Church itself. The beadle would have the boy in gaol, if that were possible, repenting his ill-timed merriment in rueful contemplation of unpicked oakum. Of course applied to the affairs of higher life, the gamin's wit would be very much out of place. If in Hongkong, for instance, any one had been foolish enough to direct against people in positions of real dignity, pointless jokes on a level with the fun poked by a street-boy against a beadle, the joker would degrade himself to the level of the street-boy. He would entirely fail, however, to degrade the objects of his joke to the level of the beadle. That could only be done by themselves, by a beadle-like course of regarding the affair as something of the very utmost importance. In such an impossible case the whole character of the transaction would be changed, it would be altogether reduced to the rank of a street-row, cognisable only by the rules of such encounters, and it would be open to consideration whether boy or beadle had the best of it.

The grand maxim, in short, in connexion with ridicule is, joke back or take no notice. In many cases, of course, it is entirely inconsistent with a man's dignity to joke back. When the street-boy, to whom again we must recur for an illustration, asks, say at a Lord MAYOR's show, some irreverent question in connexion with the gilt coach, it is out of the question that the chief magistrate of the city should retort with sarcasm in reference to the street-boy's hatter, or anything of that kind, but because he is debarred from doing this he does not on that account think it necessary to stop the procession and have the boy whipped. He cannot joke back, and therefore he takes no notice. To take a higher example, Punch is often outrageously offensive in the jokes it levels against DISRAELI, but still they are in the nature of jokes, however bad their taste may be. DISRAELI cannot joke back, therefore he takes no notice. Ridicule of any kind depends, indeed, for its sting in a large measure on the extent to which it is just and appropriate, and stupid attempts at ridicule have no force whatever beyond the force of their recoil against the person who makes them. For this reason is it that over-sensitiveness so often leads people to commit themselves by resenting ridicule. Directly they resent it, they show that it stings and give it an importance it would never have otherwise. There is a cant phrase in America "who struck Billy Patterson?" as destitute of meaning as the unintelligible Parisian phrase "Et tu Lambert," or the pointless and mysterious assertion "You don't lodge here, Mr. Ferguson," which is, or was many years back, familiar to the youth of London. Whenever a man shows unreasonable wrath at an attack which he ought to have despised, out comes the sympathetic inquiry, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" but the question is not likely to put any one who chooses to impersonate Billy Patterson in a better position with the public than before. It is foolish enough when a man insists on such a question himself, but he has indeed reason to exclaim "save me from my friends" when others, professing genuine sympathy, not alone raise the cry, "who struck Billy Patterson" on his account, but invest the inquiry as well with an air of the utmost importance.

The Italian Opera.

The "Sonnambula" was performed last night to a large audience, and received with great enthusiasm, many people declaring after the second act that the company had never done anything else so well. Without going that length, we may agree that Signor Piccioli was in exceptionally good voice, and that the duet between Elvino and Amina in the second act, after the heroine has been discovered in the Count's room, went admirably, justifying the prolonged and vehement applause with which it was received. Signor Piccioli also gave the familiar "Still so gently" in a style which led the audience to insist on an encore. Madame Bouché's Amina (and curtailed of Lisa's part, together with choruses and the nurse, the opera was mostly a duet between soprano and tenor), was a carefully studied and artistic effort, with numberless points calling for notice. The acting was perfect, but forgotten by the audience, absorbed in listening for every note of the full rich voice in which Bellini's delicious melodies were rendered so faultlessly. From "Come per me sereno" to the brilliant finale "Ah non giunge," Madame Bouché's singing last night showed, as we have so often declared it to have shown before, perfect artistic manipulation of a natural organ of extreme beauty, one day no doubt destined to achieve a far wider renown than in Indian cities and Eastern colonies.

Police Intelligence, May 3rd.

BEFORE H. W. GOODLAKE, Esq.

A notorious street gambler was arrested this morning, by P. C. Patrick Haley, plying his vocation on the Praya. Being such a well-known character, and having been repeatedly fined small amounts, he was now fined $5, or to be imprisoned for three weeks, with hard labour. As he was leaving the dock, prisoner acknowledged that he had formerly been a gambler, but was now a reformed character. It is to be hoped that the punishment inflicted in this case will effectually finish the work of reformation.

OBSTRUCTING THE POLICE.

Chun-a-wah, a villainous-looking scoundrel belonging to Wanchi, was brought up on the above charge.

P. C. 115 stated that while on duty last night near the Sing-song at East Point, he heard a cry of "Thief," and saw three men running. He pursued after them, when prisoner came behind and pushed him down. He immediately got up and arrested prisoner before he had time to get away. Prisoner had an open clasp-knife in his hand.

Prisoner had no evidence to disprove this charge, and told one or two contradictory lies which did not do him any good.

His Worship said that the police must be protected in the execution of their duty, and those who interfered with them must be punished. Prisoner was fined $10, or to go to gaol for two months with hard labour, and told that had he made any use of the knife, he would have been much more severely punished.

UNLAWFUL POSSESSION.

Ng-a-look, carpenter employed at the Aberdeen Dock, was charged with being in unlawful possession of a quantity of composition nails.

Sheik Hussein, watchman in Aberdeen Dock, noticed yesterday noon, when the workmen were leaving for their dinner, that prisoner was carrying a jacket in his hand carefully rolled up. He stopped him, and examined this jacket, inside which he found the nails produced.

Prisoner had the effrontery to say that the nails had been given him by his master, but could not exactly say who this person was. It certainly was not the foreman, for that individual ordered the watchman to take him to the station.

His Worship told prisoner that there could be no doubt whatever that he had attempted to steal these nails; he should go to gaol for fourteen days with hard labour.

A REGULAR "FENCE."

Lum-a-wot, marine-store dealer, living in the notorious Ship-street, Wanchi, a well-known "fence," was brought up by Sergeant Granger, in charge of Wanchi station, under a warrant for being in unlawful possession of a quantity of horse-hair, Government property.

Sergeant Granger stated that on the 1st inst., at about 3 p.m., as he was passing the prisoner's house, he saw a bag of hair standing outside the door. He stopped and examined this hair, and asked the prisoner how he became possessed of the property, and he said he had bought it at a Military Store's auction a short time ago. On communicating with the barrack-master, however, that official said that nothing of the kind had been sold for two years, and then it had been of a different description. Prisoner afterwards said he had bought it from Messrs. Lane and Crawford. Witness then applied for a general search-warrant, which was not granted—merely one to search for the hair, the loss of which had been reported. Witness searched the house, and besides the hair produced found a tremendous conglomeration of articles—gold and silver bangles, rings, pins, and other ornaments; pieces of silk and valuable silk dresses, concealed under old coils of rope, pieces of old canvas, and piles of old metal nails, and in fact, the heterogeneous collection usually found in a marine store-dealer's shop, and which of course he could not touch. Prisoner told him that he had obtained the ornaments in California, but they were stowed away in such a manner as to leave no doubt of their being stolen, besides this being such a notorious house and neighbourhood. Witness would like a warrant now, but since Mr. Masson refused to grant one, yesterday was afraid the things would all be removed by this time. His Worship, however, offered to grant a warrant on "spec."

Sergeant Keay, acting barrack sergeant of the 79rd Regiment, stated that some hair had been missing from the military stores, and he had compared what was found in prisoner's shop with some of that remaining, and found the quality identical. Witness went to Messrs. Lane and Crawford's next day, and on inquiry found that they had sold some hair lately, but not of this description.

Prisoner adhered to the tale that he had purchased the hair from Messrs. Lane, Crawford and Co., and the case was remanded to ten a.m. on Monday next in order that a witness from that house may be in attendance to give evidence.

LARCENY FROM THE PERSON.

Lee-a-sow, a disreputable looking rascal, belonging to the purlieus of Wanchi, was charged with assaulting Ho-a-chow, a horse boy, and robbing him of a jacket while walking in the public streets.

Prosecutor stated that yesterday afternoon he was walking along Wanchi, carrying a coat tied up in a handkerchief, in his hand. Suddenly some one seized him from behind, and pinioned his arms to his side, while another man snatched the bundle from his hand and ran off. The other man threw him down, and made off, but prosecutor gave chase and caught him. Prisoner is that man. The man who ran away with the bundle made good his escape, but prosecutor would know him again. He never lost sight of prisoner for a moment.

Prisoner had not a single word to say for himself, and His Worship said that he had undoubtedly been found guilty of the charge brought against him. He should be imprisoned for three months for the assault, and receive a whipping of twelve strokes. Had he at all injured prosecutor by the attack, he would have received a much more severe sentence.

ASSAULTING THE POLICE.

Chun-yu-hing, coffee-shop keeper, Lascar-row, was charged with assaulting and beating a constable in the execution of his duty.

Indian P. C. 216 stated that at about half-past ten o'clock last night he was on duty in Lascar-row, and saw eight or ten Chinamen skylarking and making a noise in the street opposite prisoner's house. He told them that they must stop inside, as they had no passes, and some of them did go in the house. Witness, thinking they were all right and quiet, walked on, but on his return found them outside again. He again told them to go in, and they promised to do so. The third time he came back they were still there, and this time he told them that if they did not go inside at once he would arrest them. They then commenced to abuse him in Chinese and Hindustanee, and, on a word from the prisoner, some of them seized hold of him, threw him down and beat him and while there pelted him with Soda-water bottles from inside the house (several broken bottles produced and bruises shown by witness.) He was afterwards dragged inside, and a table thrown on him. He called for assistance, and a European and some Indian constables came up and rescued him.

P. C. Thomas O'Brien deposed to hearing previous witness calling for assistance, and on running to the spot, he heard some bottles smashed upon the road, and saw P. C. 216 on the ground; another constable also deposed to the same fact.

Prisoner made a roundabout statement about the constables being drunk and coming into his house, but was ordered to pay a fine of $20, or to be imprisoned for two months with hard labour.

Dark Clouds Over Europe.

(From the "Examiner.")

However disposed to regard sinister rumours and predictions of approaching calamities and "last woes" in the light in which alone they should generally be regarded—as the idle dreams of diseased imaginations—there are occasionally premonitory portents extant which no amount of phlegmatism or scepticism can wholly ignore. . . It is notorious that for some years past the political ties, whether of sympathy or interest, which bound the Governments of Europe in something like a federal system, have been relaxed; and, as a consequence, that events of the greatest importance and significance have been left very much to be decided by chance and the current of events. That such a condition of the States of Europe may have postponed a general war up to the present period, may be true; but that it could have any other effect than to lead to ultimate confusion, no one who believes that reflection and foresight were given for the avoidance of danger and ruin can for a moment doubt.

As the result of this laissez-faire laissez-passer system, what do we see? That no man would buy the peace of Europe at six months' purchase. The opinion is becoming universal that the general tranquillity can not be preserved beyond that time. The same language is heard in the Ministerial Globe of London and the official journals of St. Petersburg and Moscow. It must be a chaotic state of the world when a Grand Duke of Russia drinks a toast to the revolutionists of Crete, and Garibaldi has left his island-home to preach up and organize an expedition in their favour. It had been almost sworn, says the organ of Sir Stafford Northcote, that we were to remain at peace this year, but we now doubt whether it will be possible to prevent war from breaking out before the year expires. A great war, it adds, is but a question of time. The Moscow Gazette is more precise in its utterances. "The solution of the Eastern question" it declares to be "a matter of necessity. The critical day approaches rapidly. The events which are preparing in the Peninsula of the Balkan are our cause." Not less emphatic is the language of the Journal de St. Petersbourg. It directs attention to the "immediate" evils which may be the effect of Turkey continuing the oppression of the Christian people of the East. The Russian official journal also contains some despatches of Prince Gortschakoff to the Russian Minister in London, which break off with a recommendation that Crete should be made independent under the suzerainty of the Porte; and this comes accompanied with a report that the Russian soldiers on furlough have received orders to join their regiments, and that a Russian force is to be moved towards the Turkish frontiers in the course of next month.

Again, we learn from the Mémorial Diplomatique, that an expedition is preparing against Turkey, from the Italian shores of the Adriatic, to be led by Garibaldians, if not by Garibaldi himself; and from another quarter it is stated that the electoral agitation in Italy, which has produced an unusual degree of excitement, is not foreign to the Eastern question,—having been got up for the purpose of driving the Ricasoli Ministry from power, and detaching Italy from her Prussian connection. In Berlin, Herr von Bismarck has made an urgent appeal to the members of the new North German Parliament, to agree to the Constitution before the 18th of next August, within which period, by the Convention of Berlin of the 18th of August, 1866, the more enlarged confederation with the States of South Germany may be effected; whilst at Vienna, there is unbounded joy at the renewed attachment of Hungary to the monarchy, and the vigorous steps taken by the Diet of Pesth in carrying out the Imperial wishes. We may mention, as among the signs of the times, a report, to which an excited imagination only could give origin, that Queen Victoria recommended the King of the Belgians to become a member of the German Confederation, with a view of securing Belgium against the supposed designs of the Emperor of the French.

When we find at our own doors, under a Constitutional system where men undoubtedly possess a large amount of freedom, the torch of civil war spattering and smoking, although it will not take light, we may well bring together the signs of the ominous times which appear to be impending over Europe. In all probability the thunder will burst in the East, but who can contemplate the mixture of races, nationalities, and creeds, which overspreads the whole of that part of Europe, with the hope that if once heard there, its roll will not be echoed afar off?

We give up as perfectly hopeless the attempt to unravel the policy of any of the great Powers in respect to the Eastern question, except, perhaps, that of Russia, which seems to contemplate the possession of Constantinople with a persistency and firmness of hope that in itself does so much for its own realization. The common saying in Paris is not now après moi le déluge, but après l'exposition vous verrez. Never since 1815 was the general peace of Europe in so critical a position.

The State of Parties.

(From the "Saturday Review.")

It may be doubted whether political parties have ever been in so absurd a state of confusion as at present. Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli have, to the horror of some of their followers, passed round the flank of the Liberal line, and taken up a position in its rear; or, perhaps it might be said more accurately, that they have intimated an intention of executing a manœuvre which may, after all, be found too anomalous to be practically attempted. A fortnight ago, the residuary portion of the Cabinet had adopted the scheme of household suffrage, to be counterbalanced by certain checks which, according to Lord Stanley, would deprive the measure of any dangerous character. Sir John Pakington has in plainer terms informed his constituents that one of the securities is the unpopular scheme of a double vote. While those who adhere to the Government think it best, in their consternation, to prove their loyalty by unhesitating obedience to their leaders, a large part of the House of Commons is still more painfully surprised. The nature of any communications which may have passed between Mr. Bright and Mr. Disraeli is not publicly known, and any conjectural version will be open to contradiction; but Mr. Gladstone perhaps regards with some indignation an exchange of Parliamentary confidences which formed an effective argument against last year's Bill, when a secret concert with Mr. Bright was inaccurately imputed to himself. The wonderful course adopted by the Ministry has for the moment effectually perplexed an Opposition which, having been prepared at the opening of the Session to urge on sluggish Reformers, is scarcely certain whether it may not soon be required to defend the Constitution. Mr. Gladstone's prudence and moderation have been severely tried. It is possible that he may regard with uneasiness the consequences of any rash innovation. By overthrowing the Ministry he would secure to himself the future conduct of the measure; and even if the members of the present Government were inclined to oppose him, Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli have in legal phrase, admitted themselves out of Court. Sir John Pakington makes their conduct ludicrous by his statement that the Cabinet, on a certain day, was forced to determine the future Constitution of England at ten minutes' notice. The conduct of the Ministers must have tended to heal the recent dissensions in the Liberal party.

Lord Russell has not been able to restrain the expression of feelings which may perhaps be shared by Mr. Gladstone. The House of Lords was amused by a characteristic notice of motion for returns, which were intended to show that the working-classes had not been really disfranchised by the Act of 1832. It would be difficult to select any question which was more entirely devoid of historical interest and of present importance. Preston and Coventry and Orator Hunt serve to point a few of Mr. Disraeli's sentences, but no other English politician affects to lament the untimely doom of the freemen and pot-wallopers of former times. It may or may not have been a mistake to establish a uniform franchise, but the working-classes exercised no perceptible influence on public affairs in the days of rotten boroughs; Lord Russell observed, with perfect truth, that Lord Liverpool and Lord Castlereagh were not enthusiastic Reformers. The extraordinary proceedings of the Government appear to have reduced Lord Russell himself to a similar condition. The greater part of his speech was occupied with proofs of the inimitable perfection of the Act of 1832, and he went through Mr. Lowe's familiar illustrations of the exploits of the Reformed Parliament. It is true that Lord Russell also took credit for several abortive attempts to renew the triumphs of his earlier years, and those peers who may possibly have wished to hear of 1852, of 1854, and 1860, found their curiosity gratified. Lord Russell's original object was perhaps wholly antiquarian and autobiographical. His inexhaustible interest in the details of the Reform Act, and his antipathy to the Chandos clause, have on former occasions rendered him insensible to the coldness of a weary audience. After his notice of motion had been given, the Ministerial explanations of last week recalled Lord Russell's attention to the more urgent question of an extensive reduction of the franchise. Even the memory of his former exploits was effaced in his anxiety to deprecate the establishment of household suffrage. The crowds who have passed votes of thanks to Lord Russell will be disappointed with his opposition to the measures of the present Government. Lord Derby amused himself with the obsolete proposal to remove into the operation of the first Reform Bill, but he had no defence against the charge of having undertaken to legislate in a panic.

The future combinations of parties are uncertain, and old alliances are virtually dissolved. Lord Derby has announced his intention of withdrawing from the head of the party which he has guided for twenty years, and Mr. Disraeli has perhaps at length rendered himself impossible by trying too severely the allegiance of his docile followers. Above all, a general concert of Liberal opinion demands the tardy abdication of Lord Russell. A statesman who has neither forgotten the Chandos clause nor learnt that all the rest of the world has forgotten it, is not suited to the management of contemporary politics. The party has sometimes placed a hesitating confidence in Mr. Gladstone; but, in default of any rival candidate, it is generally wished that the inevitable leader should be supported, and at the same time restrained by the responsibility which can only belong to the highest political rank. The precedent of Lord Palmerston is not strong enough to justify a perpetual preference of Ministers far advanced in life. Lord Russell has none of the gaiety of spirit or of the superficial sympathies which made his predecessor universally popular. Lord Palmerston was little disposed to dwell on his youthful achievements, and Lord Russell cares for nothing else. His retirement might be gracefully occupied in imaginary combats with wicked promoters of Chandos clauses, or with more criminal opponents of Reform. The House of Commons and the country have more pressing matters to consider, and they wish to be guided by a statesman who lives in the present. There is, however, reason to believe that Mr. Gladstone shares the alarm of Lord Russell at Mr. Disraeli's precipitate legislation.

If Mr. Disraeli loses the confidence of his followers, the Conservative party will probably split into two sections, respectively led by Lord Stanley and Lord Cranborne. Two able members of the same party have seldom been so diametrically opposed in opinions and in general tendencies. Lord Cranborne, free as he is from political bigotry, instinctively opposes change, while Lord Stanley is a consistent utilitarian. The agitation on Reform has divided parties by transverse lines, because many unprejudiced politicians believe that the influence of a numerical majority would be exercised in a retrograde direction. Lord Stanley perhaps differs little in opinion from Mr. Lowe, although he is more cautious in avowing unpopular doctrines. Both statesmen would be zealous in reforming secular abuses, and they would be equally incapable of being misled by extravagant reverence in dealing with ecclesiastical affairs. The intelligent minority has hitherto been usually all source of improvements which might perhaps be found impracticable under the supremacy of the multitude. Lord Cranborne has adopted the opinions and feeling of the thorough-going and imaginative Conservatives; and so long as the higher classes are represented in Parliament by members of their own body, there will always be a conscientious party of resistance. It is not often that an able, versatile, and liberal-minded leader is found to sympathize so heartily as Lord Cranborne with the commonplace creed of his followers. On Lord Derby's retirement he will almost certainly place himself at the head of the more genuine Conservatives, while Lord Stanley will rather seek to convert his party to practicable and popular opinions. After the fall of the present Ministry, the different sections of Opposition will have time enough to remodel their organization before their return to office.

While Lord Russell and Mr. Gladstone are proclaiming or concealing their alarm at the policy of the Government, a natural curiosity attends the movements and the language of Mr. Bright. No other political leader has any triumph to boast, and Mr. Bright is probably not ashamed of the intimidation which has brought his professed enemies to his feet. Yet it is supposed that Mr. Bright himself has received the tidings of Mr. Disraeli's conversion with a certain amount of surprise and disappointment; and it is possible that, notwithstanding the violence of his language, he may have been willing to assent to a comparatively limited measure. A mere levelling scheme, diversified with nominal securities, would almost certainly end in the removal of all restrictions. Mr. Bright has never yet asked within the walls of the House what Mr. Disraeli was ten days ago willing to concede; and if a third Bill should ultimately take the place of the project which was expounded to the party meeting, it is by no means certain that Mr. Bright would disapprove of a 3l. rating franchise. The ringleaders of the seditious mobs in Trafalgar-square are beginning to distrust their sole Parliamentary leader; and the small section in the House of Commons which follows the lead of Mr. Bright is probably not disinclined to a compromise.

Russia and the Eastern Question.

(From "La Presse" of March 11.)

Immediately after the peace of Nikolsburg we said that the annihilation of the German Confederation would have as a result the revival of the Eastern question. . . . .

The excessive aggrandisements of Prussia, by rendering an alliance indispensable to her, until she had fashioned all Germany as she pleased under her yoke, did not permit of the Cabinet of Berlin sticking as to the conditions on which she could secure the support of a great neighbouring Power. The community of interests naturally led to an agreement in conduct. Whether this treaty of alliance, so often spoken of, were signed or not, it is written in all the acts of the two Powers.

We have seen, in fact, the more or less justified complaints of the Cretans transformed into an insurrection, then that insurrection perpetuated and extended by the indisputable support of a State which glories in following the impulse of the Russian Cabinet. We have seen a formidable agitation grow gradually and extend to all the European provinces of Turkey. Shall we be accused of injustice if we apply the maxim of law, Is fecit cui prodest?

That Russia has seized on these facts to raise the Eastern question, she confesses herself by the publication of four despatches from Prince Gortschakoff to the Russian ambassador in London.

On the 12th of September, 1866, Prince Gortschakoff wrote to M. Brunow:—

"We have no design against the integrity of the Porte, if it can maintain itself. No danger threatens it from us. But without allowing ourselves to prejudice the decrees of Providence, we do not disguise the perils to which the existence of the Ottoman Government is exposed, in consequence of its interior disorganization, the violence of passions, and, perhaps, even arrière pensées, in which we do not participate.

"We are, moreover, convinced that peace with its Christian subjects, based on a satisfaction of their lawful aspirations, is an essential condition of the existence of this Power."

Thus, Russia already only admitted the integrity of Turkey as an hypothesis but little probable, the realization of which she made depend on an essential condition, the re-establishment of that interior peace which she herself was endeavouring to disturb, either directly, by her agents or indirectly by the connivance of the Greek Government.

On the 23rd of November Prince Gortschakoff again laid it down as a principle that the only possible form of existence for the Turkish Empire was the concession to the Christians of an autonomy which would render the authority of the Sultan purely nominal; and he invited the Powers "to acquire the strength necessary to carry out these views, without any violent shock, by an agreement amongst themselves." He asked them, in fact, to exercise on Turkey a pressure which left no alternative on its part but desperate resistance or abdication.

This despatch of the 23rd of November is not the dernier mot of Russia. The Journal de St. Petersbourg, on publishing the documents we speak of, adds an introduction, wherein we read these significant words:—"Events have since greatly progressed. Without influencing the principles which have always guided the Imperial policy, they have necessarily caused some modifications in their application and fresh negotiations which are now going on."

Events have, then, progressed since the 23rd of November. Need we say in what sense in the presence of that torrent of appeals and demands with which the Turkish Government has been deluged, in the presence of the manifestations of all kinds which have been made with éclat in Russia, and in which the members of the Imperial family joined publicly. Need we speak of the menacing commentary the Journal de St. Petersbourg made a few days ago on the proclamation of the Sultan, by giving it to be understood that the material and moral support of Russia would not fail to be given to an insurrectionary attempt.

The Journal de St. Petersbourg need not have said that events and resolutions have not influenced the principles of Russian policy; this is seen very well by the language she uses every day, by the acts of Russian emissaries, and the hopes they express.

What is, however, the conduct of Prussia, whose secret concurrence alone explains the tenour with which Russia is rushing again into an adventure which cost her so dear ten years ago? The attitude and language of the Berlin Cabinet are irreproachable; it professes most complete indifference; it has no wish but for the removal of difficulties
